Native American communities possess tremendous energy resources, including oil and natural gas reserves, solar, wind, geothermal, and water energy potential. Despite the crucial role of energy in the well-being of Native American communities, most Tribal Governments do not have laws to regulate the activities of the energy industry within their lands. The Tribal Energy Consortium has developed the first Model Tribal Energy Code in the United States. The Model Tribal Energy Code combines and adapts provisions from existing federal, state, and Tribal laws governing the energy industry, and incorporates new provisions designed for the specific conditions affecting Native American energy development. The Code can be adapted by Tribal governments at no cost to support the specific needs and goals of their respective Nations, creating energy governance laws consistent with each Nation's unique conditions, culture, and priorities.	1,001 words- 1,500 words
