“Great Minds Think Differently: Neurodiversity for Lawyers and Other Professionals” is an excellent book written by Haley Moss, an autistic lawyer who practices in Coral Gables, Florida. Moss is an experienced writer who has authored autism guidebooks for children, students, and young adults. In her ABA book, Moss explains how law firms can gain a competitive advantage by working with neurodivergent minds.

The book is organized into seven chapters that explain neurodiversity and the benefits of accommodating it in law schools and law firms. There are also chapters on how to serve neurodiverse clients and prepare for the future of neurodiversity in the courtrooms and offices.

Features of the book include a detailed table of contents with subheadings that give readers a preview of contents and a guide to finding information. The book also includes a valuable glossary that facilitates quick learning and is helpful for communicating with neurodiverse clients and staff.

“Great Minds” is a guide to accommodating the unique thinking and communicating abilities of neurodiverse clients, lawyers, and staff. Neurodiverse minds have launched many of America’s greatest advances in business, health, law, science, and technology. Read this book to channel the power of these great minds into your law practice.
