Law Dawgs/Quid Pro Quo

(206) 223-1313 (The firm Karr Tuttle Campbell will answer. Don't worry, just ask for Law Dawgs).

Law Dawgs is more the legal assistant/paralegal temp side of things. Quid Pro Quo is the attorney placement arm of this recruitment firm. I specifically work with Will Chargalauf, but they are all awesome. I just got a call this morning from Will and Safeco is looking for paralegals. Anyone willing to put in paralegal time may wish to call Will and ask about this opportunity.

I have listed my resume with them, but haven't landed any positions with them, mostly because I've either been under contract or in transition. I did take advantage of Ms. Jones' resume evaluation and felt that it offered valuable insight. I think this agency is best if you completely want to avoid legal assistant/paralegal type work and get moving on landing an attorney position.

I have had limited experience with them. However, I remembered that the last time I met with them they had a particular interest in persons with IP experience. Yamina, these folks may be able to assist you, especially since you've taken IP classes.

Firms that hire their own contract attorneys, mostly for document review:

Perkins Coie, LLP

K & L Gates

Lastly, for those who speak a second language, consider any of the legal clinics in town. Spanish speaking attorneys are always in demand for legal clinics, though I imagine any second language in Seattle would be highly appreciated. Look for legal clinics through KCBA and WSBA.
